

BROOKE MORIBER

FROM NEW YORK TO NASHVILLE

Brooke Moriber is a singer/songwriter and native New Yorker who has paved an unconventional path for herself in Country music. After getting her start at a young age professionally performing on Broadway, Brooke turned to songwriting as a teenager to cope with losing her eyesight to a rare eye disease. When the disease went into remission after a difficult four years, Brooke began traveling to Nashville to tell her own stories. Praised for her “clarion voice” (Associated Press), she released her first single “Cry Like A Girl” independently in 2019 and later signed with Nashville’s Reviver Records where she released her self-titled album featuring Holy Ground, a soulful duet with The Voice’s Ian Flanigan.

Brooke's music has been featured on editorial playlists such as Spotify’s New Music Friday Country (Little Bit of You, Half A Heart, Down to Nothing) and Country Christmas (All I Want for Christmas is You), Sirius XM's Velvet, CMT online, Music Choice Network and the Music Row Country Breakout radio chart. Hailed as a "stellar songwriter and a powerhouse vocalist" (Country Swag) and a "force to be reckoned with in Country music" (Celeb Secrets Country), Brooke has shared the stage with artists ranging from Cyndi Lauper and The Gin Blossoms to Dylan Scott and Caroline Jones. The New York City girl has performed her hometown anthem “This Town Made Us” on Today in Nashville and the national anthem for her NY Knicks and the San Francisco Giants.

When she’s not in Nashville or touring you can find Brooke hosting and performing in her bimonthly “Nashville In New York” series at the iconic Bitter End where she has performed with an impressive roster of artists and writers including Kara DioGuardi, Jeff Cohen, Callista Clark, Emily Shackelton, Erin Kinsey, Matt Stell and others.

